Their father asked June to fetch a balloon. He blew it up and when he let go the neck they could feel the air coming out as wind. They were able to make waves on the water in the sink and blow a little boat of John's along. The more they pressed the balloon the harder the wind blew. 'I see,' said John. 'The wind is moving air. The air moves from where I press hard on it to where no one is pressing.' 'Yes,' said his father, 'winds blow from where pressure is high to where it is low, so if all the weather stations find what the pressure of air is, they can see from the maps which way the winds will blow.'
